Dated: Jan 31, 2008

Everyday thousands of people approach home remodeling with dread and suffer through the experience. It doesn't have to be that way. Finally, a pair of authors focuses on the experience of home remodeling.

Finally, a pair of authors focuses on the experience of home remodeling instead of the check-list.

ArtisPress has just released The Happy Remodelers, a book like no other about how to make the experience of remodeling or renovating your home a more enjoyable one. This is not another "how to remodel your kitchen" book. In this book the authors reveal how to approach remodeling in a way that makes the experience itself enjoyable and the outcome positive. It provides practical information about how to navigate a remodeling project more easily as well as how to anticipate and avoid the typical problems that people encounter. The authors share ways to avoid stress and tension, manage and control the process, and avoid overspending when remodeling.

You too can make Remodeling a Happy Experience!

In their book, the authors identify key aspects of remodeling that affect the experience and the outcome, and they guide the reader through each in an entertaining and easy to read style. Some examples of the topics this book covers include: making it less stressful; managing the money so the project doesn't get out of control or overrun the budget; making better decisions and doing it more easily; keeping relationships healthy while remodeling; bringing the reader's own hopes and dreams into the design and making them work; keeping the project organized in a simple, yet effective way; working with architects, contractors and others; making decisions which involve multiple people; minimizing or avoiding surprises – financial or otherwise; and helping the reader think through what kind of project is sensible for them.

The authors, Ignacio Arribas and Nitsa Lallas, have over twenty years of practical remodeling experience, which they have translated into insights that are helpful to any reader considering or engaged in remodeling.
